Happy Monday, readers! Today’s Polka Dot Monday brings us a fascinating article from Arizona Public Radio’s education reporter, Stateline, about how the state universities are recruiting more out-of-state students. Stateline’s reporter, Elaine S. Povich, was interviewed by Arizona Public Radio and listen to her interview from last week about how state universities are recruiting more out-of-state students. Read her article here.

Finance-strapped hospitals often look to merge with or be acquired by other systems, facing public backlash, some health care mergers and acquisitions have slowed over the past two years. But some proposed hospital deals in Connecticut, Louisiana, Minnesota and elsewhere have over the past two years. Companies are abandoning hospital deals financial strapped hospitals often look to merge with or be acquired by other systems, facing public backlash, some health care mergers and acquisitions have slowed over the past two years.

FEATURED STORY

Facing public backlash, some health care companies are abandoning hospital deals

Finance-strapped hospitals often look to merge with or be acquired by other systems, facing public backlash, some health care mergers and acquisitions have slowed over the past two years. But some proposed hospital deals in Connecticut, Louisiana, Minnesota and elsewhere have over the past two years.

Librarians are increasingly tangling with hospitals over potential health care mergers, in some cases derailing deals they think don’t serve the public interest, increasing tangling with hospitals over potential health care mergers, in some cases derailing deals they think don’t serve the public interest.

WE ARE READING

1. Drake University, public health, mental health, data, health care

2. Michigan Department of Health and Human Services, health care

3. National Public Radio, health care

4. The Oregonian, health care

5. The Wall Street Journal, health care

MORE STATE NEWS

1. Arizona State University, public health, mental health

2. Arkansas Department of Health, health care

3. The Associated Press, health care

4. The Washington Post, health care

REPORTER’S NOTEBOOK

Spotlight: Our education reporter, Elaine S. Povich.

Thanks so much for reading today’s edition of Stateline Daily. Enjoy your Monday!