States were followed by Texas, Florida, Illinois and New Jersey.

For decades, U.S. residents with heritage from the Middle East and North Africa, which is known internationall as the MENA region, have been classified by the government as white. The grouping masked differences in income, health, housing and other important markers.

Last month, the federal Office of Management and Budget approved residents to use and ethnicity data collection across federal agencies, including the addition of a new MENA category to the census. Experts and advocates hope the census change will spur local and state health agencies to update their data collection methods to shed light on health variables and needs.

The Stateline Team

WHAT WE'RE READING

MEDICARE CHANGES: Texas health officials are considering revoking the state's three largest managed care plans. The plan, from Humana and Blue Cross Blue Shield, contractually, potentially affecting 170,000 enrollees and shifting leadership power to hospitals, experts say. [NPR, Texas Medcom reports.]

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTIONS: The Nevada Supreme Court ruled against a law that would have made it more difficult for non-citizens to change their legal status as members of the military. The 5-2 majority opinion said the law was preempted by federal law. [Las Vegas Review-Journal, Las Vegas Sun reports.]

STANDARDIZED TESTS: Florida long-term renewable energy project launched last year — which provides electricity to 1 gigawatt of capacity — has missed a major, year-end deadline for getting the project built, according to the Florida Power & Light report. [Miami Herald, Florida Times-Union, reports.]

OPIOID OVERDOSES: Opioid-related deaths in the state, according to the Department of Public Safety, have risen by 58% in the last year, the highest year-to-year increase in the nation. [Anchorage Daily News, reports.]

ABORTION PETITION: An initiative petition circulated by Nevadans for Reproductive Justice, which now heads to the Senate, is expected to draw a legal challenge if it becomes law. [Nevada Current, reports.]

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTIONS: An Arkansas lawmaker has introduced legislation that would create a new crime called “impermissible occupation” for willfully entering the state and remaining without legal authorization to be in the United States. The bill, according to the Arkansas Reflector, is expected to attract legal challenges if it becomes law. [Arkansas Reflector, reports.]

MEDICAID CHANGES: The Texas health officials are considering removing the state's three largest managed care plans. The plan, from Humana and Blue Cross Blue Shield, contractually, potentially affecting 170,000 enrollees and shifting leadership power to hospitals, experts say. [NPR, Texas Medcom reports.]

Immigration restrictions: The Nevada Supreme Court ruled against a law that would have made it more difficult for non-citizens to change their legal status as members of the military. The 5-2 majority opinion said the law was preempted by federal law. [Las Vegas Review-Journal, Las Vegas Sun reports.]

More state news

STANDARDIZED TESTS: Florida long-term renewable energy project launched last year — which provides electricity to 1 gigawatt of capacity — has missed a major, year-end deadline for getting the project built, according to the Florida Power & Light report. [Miami Herald, Florida Times-Union, reports.]

OPIOID OVERDOSES: Opioid-related deaths in the state, according to the Department of Public Safety, have risen by 58% in the last year, the highest year-to-year increase in the nation. [Anchorage Daily News, reports.]

ABORTION PETITION: An initiative petition circulated by Nevadans for Reproductive Justice, which now heads to the Senate, is expected to draw a legal challenge if it becomes law. [Nevada Current, reports.]

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTIONS: An Arkansas lawmaker has introduced legislation that would create a new crime called “impermissible occupation” for willfully entering the state and remaining without legal authorization to be in the United States. The bill, according to the Arkansas Reflector, is expected to attract legal challenges if it becomes law. [Arkansas Reflector, reports.]

More state news

FEATURED STORY

Census change will lead to more data on the health of Middle Eastern, North African people in US

For decades, U.S. residents with heritage from the Middle East and North Africa, which is known internationally as the MENA region, have been classified by the government as white. The grouping masked differences in income, health, housing and other important markers.

Last month, the federal Office of Management and Budget approved residents to use and ethnicity data collection across federal agencies, including the addition of a new MENA category to the census. Experts and advocates hope the census change will spur local and state health agencies to update their data collection methods to shed light on health variables and needs.

Thanks so much for reading Stateline Daily! If you enjoyed today's edition, forward this to a friend. Have a great weekend!